

Attention: Veterinarians

As a result of a generous grant from the California Veterinary Medical Foundation for the re-printing and distribution of the CVMA disaster preparedness brochures, you can offer your clients essential information on animal care during a disaster. The California Veterinary Medical Association and the California Department of Food and Agriculture developed the disaster brochures in order to provide all animal owners in the state with basic information on how to plan in advance for animal care during and after a disaster.

The brochures include information on how to prepare a disaster kit for animals and a fill-in-the-blank emergency contact panel for the client to fill out. Through public awareness we hope to reduce animal suffering during a disaster. As a part of CVMA's Disaster Preparedness program, the California Veterinary Medical Reserve Corps was started in 2007 to provide veterinary services during local and statewide disasters and emergencies. If you are interested in volunteering for the CAVMRC, or have interest in developing and coordinating animal emergency and disaster response plans in your community, please visit the CVMA website and become a member of the California Veterinary Medical Reserve Corps: www.cavmrc.net For more information, you may also contact the CVMA at (800) 655-2862.

Brochures are grouped in bundles of 100.
